DEBORAH LOCKHART

Chief Executive Officer,
Australian Disputes Centre

Deborah joined ADC in 2013, following 25 years' commercial dispute resolution experience with a range of ASX 100 and Fortune 500 companies, including as Head of Dispute Resolution for ING Australia. Completing her first mediation training in 1993, Deborah was accredited as an Advanced Mediator by ADC in 2009. Bringing the multifaceted perspectives of a client negotiator, the mediator and the ADR institution, Deborah leads the ADC's global training faculty in delivering its flagship ADR programs domestically and internationally.

About ADC

Alternative Dispute Resolution is an integral part of global business.

Established in 1986, the Australian Disputes Centre (ADC) is Australia's pre-eminent, independent, not-for-profit institution dedicated to advancing the interests of commerce, governments and communities through timely, cost-effective, and private dispute resolution processes. ADC undertakes its work domestically and internationally across four key areas:

Professional Development Training

Australia is a global leader in the uptake and best-practice of mediation in all sectors of civil society, and ADC has been at the forefront of developing this expertise for over 34 years. Specialising in commercial dispute resolution, its foundation mediation courses are recognised internationally by Australia's Mediator Standards Board, and by the Chartered Institute of Arbitrators (London), which offers ADC alumni of its 6-Day foundation Mediator Accreditation program recognition for CI Arb membership.

Disputes Management

Named in commercial and government contracts, ADC is an appointing authority for mediators, conciliators, arbitrators and experts, drawn from its highly regarded panel of advanced ADR practitioners.

Thought Leadership

ADC is an energetic and progressive advocate for the commercial and community benefits of ADR processes. In addition to its research and professional development courses, its Thought Leadership initiatives include the annual ADR Address Series, in collaboration with Australia's Supreme Courts, and the annual Australian ADR Awards.

ADR Centre

ADC provides exceptional custom-built dispute resolution facilities in the heart of Sydney's legal and financial district, together with a network of venues in other cities across Australia.
